Alfresco is an enterprise content management, content aggregation, collaboration and integration platform that supports the entire content life cycle and is an industry standard. Alfresco is delivered as a set of Apache Solr and Lucene search technologies that are distributed as open source Java code. They are supported by the Alfresco community and well-documented, making them ideal for developers and administrators alike. BitNami Alfresco Stack V3.2 includes the following components:

Alfresco Community Edition: Alfresco provides the Alfresco Server Community Edition, which includes the core Alfresco software and all third party Alfresco add-ons and features, for use by individuals or in small enterprises. It's based on the open source Alfresco Community Edition and is supported by the open community of developers and contributors.

Alfresco Open Platform Edition: Alfresco provides the Alfresco Open Platform Edition, which includes the Alfresco release, and its related extensions, for use by enterprises and software companies. It also includes Alfresco Labs, a fully integrated set of tools and templates for creating, creating, and extending Alfresco.

Alfresco Server Enterprise Edition: Alfresco provides the Alfresco Server Enterprise Edition, which includes the Alfresco database server, the Alfresco release, and its related extensions, for use by large enterprises. It's based on the open source Alfresco Enterprise Edition and is supported by the open community of developers and contributors.

Alfresco Community Edition Upgradation and Repair: Using the Repair Installation: to repair and upgrade an existing installation of the Community Edition, use the following procedure: Disable the service (if needed): Run `"/opt/bitnami/apps/alfresco/bin/alfresco-service.sh disable"` or `"alfresco-service.sh stop"`. Move the Alfresco application to another directory: Move the files and subdirectories from `/opt/bitnami/apps/alfresco/current/allegro` directory to a safe place, such as the existing `/opt/bitnami/apps/alfresco/app` directory. Run the `"repair-env.sh"` script: Run `"/opt/bitnami/apps/alfresco/bin/repair-env.sh`

Alfresco® is an enterprise Content Management (ECM) solution for managing all digital content. It provides a central repository for all content types, including documents, web pages, graphics, videos, and applications, and they can be accessible over the Web from anywhere. A rich set of online applications, visual page authoring tools, and workflow services allow users to efficiently create and collaborate on content. Workflows automate repetitive tasks, such as document approval and tracking changes. Versions of documents and files are managed, and users can document requirements and place them in a requirement tracker to keep track of important business activities. Security is a big feature of Alfresco, so the system can be used in an enterprise setting by teams of members. With many third-party applications available, Alfresco users can automate document approval, track changes, and ensure confidentiality by locking down content. The Alfresco open-source solution is distributed under the terms of the Apache License. Key Features:

- Amazon Web Services support
- Alfresco enterprise version
- Cost effective ECM solution
- Inbox is single document store and is a PIM (Personal Information Management) component of the core ECM suite
- Kanban support
- Support for approval workflows and document versioning
- Schema Management for Alfresco
- Social Collaboration
- WebDav support
